Biography

Spencer Cook is a newly admitted attorney who practices civil litigation with a focus on Construction and Architect/Engineer Law and Intellectual Property. Spencer has a background in chemical engineering and chemistry, which, prior to his legal career, he used to advise clients on their experimental and manufacturing processes and to provide creative solutions for their laboratory and production needs. Through his practice, Spencer leverages his technical expertise to assist clients with matters involving highly technical/complex scientific or engineering issues. Spencer has experience handling various types of civil litigation, including design professional and other construction litigation, professional liability, tort matters, breach of contract, and other business litigation.
